In this article, I will present my top five favorite Atlanta Ys publishing houses, along with a brief overview of each publisher's mission and aesthetic.

1. Y Press

Y Press is a non-profit literary press dedicated to publishing "daring, provocative, and challenging" works of fiction, non-fiction, and poetry. Y Press was founded in 2003 by a group of writers and editors who were dissatisfied with the state of the publishing industry. They sought to create a space for writers who were willing to take risks and push the boundaries of literature.

Y Press has published a wide range of acclaimed works, including novels, short story collections, essays, and poetry collections. Some of the press's most notable authors include Pulitzer Prize winner Colson Whitehead, National Book Award winner Jesmyn Ward, and MacArthur Fellow Claudia Rankine.

2. Hub City Press

Hub City Press is a non-profit literary press that publishes Southern literature of the highest quality. The press was founded in 1996 by a group of writers and educators who were passionate about promoting the work of Southern writers.

Hub City Press publishes a variety of genres, including fiction, non-fiction, and poetry. The press is particularly known for its commitment to publishing works by writers of color and LGBTQ writers. Some of the press's most notable authors include Pulitzer Prize winner Alice Walker, National Book Award winner Sherman Alexie, and poet laureate Natasha Trethewey.

3. Slant Books

Slant Books is a small independent press that publishes contemporary fiction, non-fiction, and poetry. The press was founded in 2010 by husband-and-wife team Kevin Prufer and Lori Horvitz. Slant Books is known for its eclectic taste and its commitment to publishing works that are both challenging and accessible.

Slant Books has published a number of award-winning books, including the National Book Critics Circle Award-winning novel "Juliet Takes a Breath" by Gabby Rivera and the Whiting Award-winning essay collection "The Empathy Exams" by Leslie Jamison.

4. Wonderdog Press

Wonderdog Press is a small independent press that publishes poetry, fiction, and non-fiction. The press was founded in 2012 by poet and editor Melissa Range. Wonderdog Press is known for its focus on emerging writers and its commitment to publishing works that are innovative and experimental.

Wonderdog Press has published a number of critically acclaimed books, including the Whiting Award-winning novel "The Great Believers" by Rebecca Makkai and the National Book Critics Circle Award-winning essay collection "Furious Hours: Murder, Fraud, and the Last Trial of Harper Lee" by Casey Cep.

5. Elixir Press

Elixir Press is a small independent press that publishes poetry, fiction, and non-fiction. The press was founded in 2015 by poet and editor Tyehimba Jess. Elixir Press is known for its focus on publishing the work of poets of color.

Elixir Press has published a number of award-winning books, including the Pulitzer Prize-winning poetry collection "Olio" by Tyehimba Jess and the National Book Award-winning novel "The Mere Wife" by Maria Dahvana Headley.

The Atlanta Ys publishing houses are a vital part of the city's literary landscape. These publishers are committed to publishing high-quality, thought-provoking literature by diverse voices. If you are interested in discovering the best of contemporary literature, I encourage you to check out the books published by these five Atlanta Ys.
