The story of Supercars is a story of innovation, passion, and success. From its humble beginnings in the 1960s, Supercars has grown into one of the most popular and successful motorsport categories in the world. Supercars are purpose-built race cars that are designed to be as fast and as safe as possible. They are powered by V8 engines that produce over 600 horsepower, and they can reach speeds of over 300 kilometres per hour. Supercars are driven by some of the most talented drivers in the world, and they compete in a variety of races throughout the year, including the iconic Bathurst 1000.

The history of Supercars can be traced back to the early days of motorsport in Australia. In the 1960s, there were a number of different race car categories in Australia, but none of them were as popular as the Australian Touring Car Championship (ATCC). The ATCC was a series of races that were held on road courses throughout Australia, and it attracted some of the best drivers in the country. In 1997, the ATCC was renamed the V8 Supercar Championship, and it has since become one of the most popular motorsport categories in Australia.

Supercars are now raced in a variety of countries around the world, but Australia is still the heart of the sport. The Bathurst 1000 is the most prestigious race on the Supercars calendar, and it is one of the most popular sporting events in Australia.
