The American Revolution

The American Revolution was a war fought between Great Britain and its thirteen colonies in North America from 1775 to 1783. The war was sparked by the colonists' dissatisfaction with British rule and their desire for independence.

The colonists were unhappy with the British government's policies, which they believed were unfair and oppressive. They were also angry about the British government's refusal to grant them representation in Parliament.

The colonists eventually decided to declare their independence from Great Britain. They did so in the Declaration of Independence, which was adopted on July 4, 1776.

The American Revolution was a long and bloody war. The colonists were eventually victorious, and they won their independence from Great Britain.

The Founding Of The United States Constitution

After the American Revolution, the colonists needed to create a new government. They did so in the United States Constitution, which was adopted in 1789.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the United States. It establishes the structure of the government and defines the rights and responsibilities of citizens.

The Constitution has been amended 27 times since it was adopted. The amendments have changed the Constitution in a number of ways, including expanding the rights of citizens and making the government more responsive to the needs of the people.
