Joss quickly established himself as one of the most dominant pitchers in the game. He possessed a devastating fastball and an unhittable curveball that kept batters off balance. In 1908, he achieved the rare feat of pitching four consecutive shutouts, a record that would stand for decades.

However, Joss's promising career was tragically cut short in 1911. While visiting his ailing father in Toledo, Ohio, he contracted meningitis, a deadly bacterial infection. Despite the valiant efforts of doctors, Joss passed away on April 14, 1911, at the age of 31.

The Mystery of Joss's Death

Joss's untimely death sent shockwaves through the baseball world and beyond. The cause of his death was initially attributed to meningitis, but the circumstances surrounding his illness remained murky. Some speculated that Joss had been infected with the disease while pitching in a dusty stadium, while others suggested that he had been poisoned.
