Here is an excerpt from the novel:

“Sarah sat on the porch swing, listening to the song of the cardinal. The sweet, mournful melody filled the air, and it stirred something deep within her. She closed her eyes and let the music wash over her, carrying her away to a place of peace and tranquility.

She thought about her husband, Michael. He had loved the cardinals. He would often sit on the porch with her, listening to their song. He would tell her how the cardinals reminded him of their love for each other, how their song was a symbol of their unbreakable bond.

Michael had died a year ago, and Sarah was still grieving. She missed him every day, and she longed to hear his voice again. But she knew that he was gone, and she had to find a way to move on with her life.

The cardinal's song reminded her of a promise she had made to Michael before he died. He had asked her to live her life to the fullest, to find happiness again. He had told her that he would always be with her, in her heart.

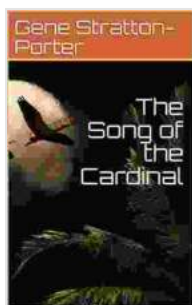

Sarah opened her eyes and looked out at the cardinals. They were singing their song, and it was a song of hope. It was a song that told her that she could find happiness again, that she could move on with her life.

Sarah stood up and walked over to the edge of the porch. She looked out at the world, and she smiled. She knew that Michael was with her, and she knew that he would always be with her.”
